

Pandemic Perseverance

For the longest I was dreamin' bout freshman year; now I can only think about Corona deaths, and fear — what twenty, twenty-one will bring . . . New presidential regime; and hopefully they're coming with a vaccine. All this virtual school work is getting taxing. Cause it piles up quick if you start relaxing. No more live shows where you can watch people sing, and no, Zoom concerts are not the same thing. No more getting fly and changing up my hair; now you show your personality through masks you wear. People are waiting on a stimulus; but most kids, we're just waiting on the end of this. Ready to get back to learning in person, hope the situation doesn't worsen — tired face shield conversing. Tired of losing loved ones with no funeral service. Nobody on Earth deserves this. Let's flatten the curve, it's, imperative that we end this. With safety precautions in place, we can win this. Though it feels like the year 20/20 is endless, the perseverance of the world is tremendous. WE ARE RELENTLESS!
